

ESIS

Assessments of indoor air quality are often due to worker or tenant complaints, symptoms, discomfort, and even illness.

ESIS performs preliminary and advanced investigations, using qualitative and quantitative methods to characterize the environment, determine if a problem exists, and develop possible controls to reduce or even eliminate the complaints and discomfort.

We can help identify spaces that could cause employee complaints or illnesses and evaluate and recommend suitable controls.