

ESIS

The UK Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations requires employers to periodically undertake a thorough examination and test of local exhaust ventilation systems.

Examinations normally include a visual inspection with measurements of static pressures, face velocities, volume flows, fan performance, and integrity of abatement filtration or other media. Examinations are carried out at set periods to ensure that no deterioration has occurred.